

My abstract paintings examine the relationship between containment and freedom, suggesting themes of protection, boundaries, and the passage of time. Texture is important to me, as I want the surface to invite close attention, with subtle marks revealing the hand behind the work. My process is both methodical and organic; each line is painted with a focus on balancing control and spontaneity, allowing the work to build and reveal itself over time.